A. stock exchange can suspend trading of scrips of a company for any violation of the listing agreement, suspected price manipulation in scrips, directions from regulatory authorities including SEBI and suspension of scrips by other stock exchanges. The listing agreement, inter alia, contains requirements relating to dissemination of information to the market and corporate governance. If the company concerned does not comply with these requirements, investment decisions taken by investors may not be adequately informed. However, suspension of trading can affect existing investors adversely since it may not leave an exit route. Therefore, whenever suspension is to be effected, prior intimation is given to the market. As a result, potential investors are warned while the existing investors have advance intimation. The suspension is revoked when the company complies with the requirements of listing.
