

this regard. Under the Revised Minimum Needs Programme (RMNP) introduced in 1978, liberal loan assistance is made available to the States, which are backward, so that by 1987-88, all the States will be enabled to electrify at least 50 per cent of their villages. Efforts are continuously made to increase power generation and distribution and to solve the problem of shortage of material, by even importing aluminium, steel, cement etc. The State Electricity Boards are also requested to strengthen their organisations to speed up rural electrification. Rural Electrification Corporation has also opened several Regional Offices in the different parts of the country to assist the Electricity Boards in formulating and implementing rural electrification schemes. To make the programme more effective, Government of India have addressed all the States to ensure that adequate power supply is ensured to rural areas/agricultural operations. Most of the States have assured that this is being done.
