

planners ; they have not percolated to the people in the rural areas.

Then I plead for the removal of illiteracy. Within five years illiteracy can be removed if only there is the political will and imagination, if there is the patriotic urge that our people should be made literate. They should be made literate, should be enabled to live in a civilised manner in a civilised society.

Then, socio-economic programmes should be undertaken for the upliftment of the weaker sections, landless workers, poor artisans, peasants, Harijans, fishermen, weavers, etc. These are the deprived people in the rural areas. They are being deprived of their due, they are being exploited. If these people can be brought to the picture of development then the entire rural picture will change.

Then, Sir, my last point is concentration of wealth should be curbed. Wealth should not be concentrated in the monopoly houses. If there is monopoly, if there is capitalistic order, with unbridled hunger for profit, then no political will can generate any patriotism in the lower rungs of the people. All your projects and planning will be futile if concentration of wealth in monopoly houses is not curbed. None of the monopoly houses, hoarders, traders and smugglers should be allowed to have this power. Capitalist profit should be curbed. Smugglers should be curbed. There should be an equitable distribution of wealth. National productivity should be increased. I think if the Government can pursue these things, they can achieve the development of rural areas.
