

finance only the stipends for the trainees, marginal increases in training personnel and marginal increases in training equipment. The other expenditure on building, vehicles, etc. would have to be met by the State Government from its own resources.

7. Establishment of functional ancillary industrial estates and special industrial estates like electronics estates or plastics estates may be encouraged. However, investments for the creation of such estates should be mobilised from institutional finance or State finance. Margin money contribution from this fund could be considered on merits.

8. Small-scale industries and cottage industries requiring lesser capital but which are production and labour-oriented should be given due importance and adequate protection.

9. Consumers' Cooperatives, Credit Cooperatives, Industrial Cooperatives etc., belonging to educated unemployed may be sponsored and encouraged by providing margin money or share-capital contribution.

10. For proper implementation of these schemes, a special cell should be created at the State level with Minister in charge and one officer of the rank of Secretary. Such cells should also include representatives from banks, Public Finance Institutions, Industries, Corporations etc. Similar cells should be created at District level as well. These cells should often meet and monitor the implementation of these schemes.
