

on the British Government to see that even persons of Indian origin who have acquired citizenship there are repatriated from Great Britain. This is the move of Mr. Powell. I would like to know whether this was any time discussed by the Indian High Commission and, if so, whether the government conveyed to them the views of the people that any such action proposed or contemplated by the British Government would infuriate public opinion in India.

1 P.M.

The Immigration Bill provides for a conduct certificate from the employer. Now what has happened is that those who have an active part in the trade union movement in Great Britain are being denied extension. And to that extent the employer has almost got a veto on the labour activities of Indians.

May I ask the hon. Minister whether he has taken up this matter with the British Government and ask him whether it is fair to leave the matter to the employer who has the power to refuse to renew a permit? Was this matter taken up by the Government with the British Government?

SARDAR SWARAN SINGH: To the first question my reply is that we do not take a note of what those who are not in the Government. We will take note of what the British Government is proposing about it rather than take up matters with such men. It is not necessary for us to do that.

About the second question, I agree with the hon. Member that this is an obnoxious provision that the employer will give a certificate and we have objected to that very strongly.
