

(b) The Acts do not prohibit this practice.

() Yes, Sir. The policy holder has to complete certain formalities while reviving his lapsed policy. The time taken for revival depends upon the time taken by the policy holder in complying with the necessary requirements like payment of arrear premiums and interest and where necessary undergoing medical examination, as well as the time taken in the Office at the various stages. The later depends on the complexity of the case and also varies from office to office.

(d) This practice of the LIC was conceived in the interest of the policyholders. It was noticed that agents and organisers often prevail upon the gullible policyholders to lapse their old policies and take out new ones, suggesting that such a course would be beneficial. As the practice has been introduced by the LIC to protect the policyholders, Government do not propose to interfere in the matter.
