

this procedure a number of vehicles available at any period of time with the Defence Services are not sufficiently reliable for operational use. The earlier policy involved a larger reserve, maintenance of an elaborate workshop organisation for overhauls, continuance in Service of obsolescent vehicles with consequent difficulties in regard to spares etc., and an uneven and fluctuating demands for vehicles on production establishments. Under the new policy, vehicles will be discarded when they have completed a specified number of miles or number of years, whichever is later, or otherwise require a complete overhaul.

By adoption of this policy, it is expected that not only Services will be having with them dependable vehicles at all times but also that there will be saving on account of lower reserves, maintenance repairs and overhauls.
