

1964, the Chairman, Air-India, had asked the American Manufacturers' representatives as to how they expected their S.S.T. models to be competitive with the sub-sonic jets which are bound to improve air economics further by the time the S.S.Ts. are introduced in 1970s, in view of the present estimates of the initial cost ranging between U.S. $ 35 to 40 million.

(b) The first prototype of Concorde is scheduled to fly in late 1967 and the delivery to airlines is expected to start in 1971. The present indications are that the price will be more than Rs. 7 crores.

(c) No final decision has been taken by the U.S. authorities regarding the American S.S.Ts. The production programme of the Concorde also does not appear to have been finalised. There is no proposal at present to cancel the booking for delivery positions and does not involve any final commitment.
