(b) According to SEBI, although the market had witnessed a downfall in the turnover in the initial period after the introduction of rolling settlement and banning of deferral products by SEBI w.e.f. July 02, 2001, there has been a substantial recovery in volume, number of shares traded and number of transaction in the past few months. The volume, number of shares traded and number of transactions at the National Stock Exchange (NSE) during the past few months have been comparable to or even higher than the same posted by NSE during the months immediately prior to the introduction of rolling settlement and banning of deferral products.

(c) SEBI is of the view that currently various derivative products including individual stock futures are available for investors in order to enter into transactions for settlement at a future date. The market has witnessed a significant level of activity in the derivatives segment during the past few months. Further, with the introduction of rolling settlement in the cash segment, the introduction of carry forward would require carrying forward of the positions everyday which may be cumbersome and may not be cost effective.
