(b) if so, what was the basis of such a disclosure;

(c) whether he also stressed that larger than life obsession with Al-Quida was leading to inadequate consultations and intelligence sharing on global terrorist threat; and

(d) the reaction and response of the Munich Security Conference thereto?

[24 April, 2003]

RAJYA SABHA

THE MINISTER OF STATE IN THE MINISTRY OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS (SHRI DIGVIJAY SINGH): (a) to (c) The National Security Adviser and Principal Secretary to PM in his address to the Munich Security Conference said, inter alia:

"The novel version of democracy, which Pakistan recently unveiled, has brought in more religious extremist forces into the polity, particularly on the Afghanistan border. The safe havens for Al-Quida and Taliban elements may expand in consequence. If you also remember that Pakistan's nuclear assets are believed to be stored in tunnels and caves in the Chagai Hills of Bluchistan, our concerns should be obvious. Persistent reports of the freelance activities of some Pakistani nuclear scientists only add to our disquiet. A larger-than-life obsession with the 'global' Al-Queda group results in inadequate political consultations and selective intelligence sharing on the global terrorist threat. This has led to some costly gaps in the campaign against international terrorism".

(d) The Annual Munich Conference organised by an influential private foundation provides the opportunity for discussions and debate among top policy and opinion makers from different countries. It is not a forum where any decisions are taken.
